STAGE STORIES.

Amusement Announcements, Lobby Chatter—Odd Bits of Gossip.

"AT THE WHITE HORSE TAVERN."

One of the most remarkable, and yet simple, mechanical devices of modern stage craft is the rain machine used in the first act of "At the White Horse Tavern" which will be the attraction at The Grand to-night.

"How do they make this downpour of rain?" asks everybody who looks with amazement at the dripping umbrella on the stage, and at the dripping umbrella which has failed to protect them from the fury of the storm. Nor is this all that startles the spectator; for there is a water-spout which drains the roof of the inn, pouring gallons of water into the rain barrel, beside the door porch, while two other spouts shed a small torrent, which has gathered on the roof which shades the veranda in the second story.
These four streams of water, curiously enough, are managed by one man on the right side of the stage with a very simple contrivance. The company carries among its properties a rubber hose arrangement, branching out into three sections. One section feeds the water spout by the door porch; the second one supplies the two streams that pour from the veranda roof, and the third connects with an iron perforated pipe which runs up to, and across the stage a little above the border lights. The stage is covered with a water-proof cloth which protects it from the water, and in this covering there is a pocket which fits into a small trap cut in the floor of the stage. Through this pocket and trap the water flows from the stage into a barrel placed underneath. In some cities as many as three large barrels full of water fall on the stage, owing to the repeated curtain calls given this remarkable stage rain storm.

tion sketch in which the entire company

ing artists in that line; buck and wing

The company carries their own superb

POWERS HAVE AGREED

The Death Penalty to Be Inflicted on the Boxer Ringleaders.

The Powers Acquire the Right of Occupying Certain Ports Upon Which They May Agree Among Themselves.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—The text of the agreement between the powers has been made public by the imperial chancellor, Count Von Buelow. Following is a summary:

An extraordinary mission headed by an imperial prince shall be sent to Berlin in order to express the regret of the emperor of China and of the Chinese government for the murder of Baron von Ketteler. On the scene of the murder a monument worthy of the assassinated minister shall be erected with an inscription in Latin, German and Chinese, expressing the regret of the emperor of China.

The death penalty is to be inflicted upon Princes Tuan and Chuang, upon Duke Lan, and, further, upon Ying Nien, Kang Yi, Chao Shu Chiao, Tung Fuh Siang, Yu Hsien and other ringleaders whose names will be given by the representatives of the powers. The Chinese government shall erect a monument in every foreign or international cemetery which has been desecrated, or where the graves have been destroyed. The prohibition of the import of arms into China shall be maintained until further notice. China must pay a just indemnity to governments, corporations and individuals, as well as to those Chinese who suffered during the recent events in person or in property in consequence of being in service of foreigners.

Every single foreign power is granted the right of maintaining a permanent legation guard, and of placing the quarter of Peking where the legations are situated in a state of defense.

The Taku forts and those forts which might prevent free communication between Peking and the sea shall be razed. The powers acquire the right to occupy certain ports on which they agree among themselves, upon the object of maintaining free communication from the capital and the sea. The Chinese government is bound to post imperial decrees for two years at all sub-prefectures. In these decrees (a) to belong to any anti-foreign sect is forever forbidden under penalty of death; (b) the punishments inflicted upon the guilty are recorded. In the event of fresh anti-foreign disturbances or other infringements of the treaties which are not at once stopped and avenged by punishment of the guilty, the local authorities shall be promptly deposed and never again intrusted with official functions or invested with fresh dignities.

The Chinese government undertakes to enter upon negotiations with regard to such alterations in the existing commercial and navigation treaties as the foreign governments consider to be desirable, as well as regarding other matters which are concerned with facilitating commercial relations.

"The Chinese government shall be bound to reform the Chinese foreign office and the court ceremonial for the reception of foreign representatives, and to do so in the sense which shall be defined by the foreign powers."

FEDERATION OF LABOR.

There Will Be Little or No Opposition to the Re-Election of Samuel Gompers as President.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 13.—Wednesday's sessions of the American Federation of Labor apparently disclosed the fact that there will be little or no opposition to the re-election of Samuel Gompers as president. Two propositions, the votes on which may be regarded as tests, resulted in decisive triumphs for the ideas advocated by Mr. Gompers. Max Hayes, of Cleveland, led the opposition in both instances, but the battle did not at any time become personal or bitter. One of the resolutions was to limit the term of the federation's president in the future to two years; the other provided for the election of officers of the body by the initiative and referendum, instead of a vote in mass convention on the last day of the annual session, as prevails at present. These were defeated.

The contest for next year's convention appears to lie between Milwaukee and Scranton, Pa.

Committed Lese Majeste.

Berlin, Dec. 12.—Max Lenzmann, the 10-year-old son of a Berlin lawyer, has been dismissed from his gymnasium and forbidden to enter any other in Prussia for committing lese majeste when the principal of the gymnasium mentioned to the pupils the recent attempt at Breslau upon the life of Emperor William.

LIEUT. GEN. MILES.

While Heading the Centennial Parade a Break in His Horse's Saddle Girth Gave Him a Fall.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Lieut. Gen. Miles had a slight accident while heading the centennial parade on Wednesday, a break in his horse's saddle girth giving the general a fall. The head of the parade had just passed the president's reviewing stand and Gen. Miles, having saluted the president, had turned his horse toward the house wing of the capital. The saddle girth suddenly parted, permitting the saddle to turn on the animal, and Gen. Miles was seen to fall sideways. The horse did not plunge, and an officer sprang forward. Being a good horseman, Gen. Miles saved himself from being thrown with force and suffered nothing save the inconvenience and annoyance of the accident. He soon afterward appeared with the other distinguished officials in the house of representatives and took part in the exercises.

THE CANTEN SYSTEM.

Several Members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs Are Favorable to Its Retention.

Washington, Dec. 13.—In connection with its consideration of the army reorganization bill the senate committee on military affairs Wednesday listened to an argument by Adj. Gen. Corbin for the continuation of the present canteen system in the army. The committee has taken no formal vote on the subject, but there has been more or less exchange of opinion among members, the result of which has been favorable to the retention of the present system and the elimination of the house canteen provisions. The committee expects to conclude its hearings on the bill Thursday.

CONVENT DESTROYED.

The Flames Spread So Rapidly That Several of the Sisters Were Slightly Burned.

Ft. Dodge, Ia., Dec. 13.—The Sisters of Mercy convent, the largest frame building in the city, was burned to the ground early Wednesday. A high gale was blowing, and the flames spread so rapidly that several of the sisters were slightly burned before they could escape. All of their personal effects and the large library used in the parochial school, where 150 pupils attended, and all the furnishings were consumed. Only $3,500 insurance was carried on the building, which was valued at $10,000. It is thought the fire was incendiary.

GIGANTIC DINOSAURI.

Two Specimens of These Extinct Animals Discovered on the Ft. Meade Military Reservation.

St. Paul, Minn., Dec. 13.—A Ft. Meade (S. D.) special says: Skeletons of two gigantic dinosauri have been discovered on the military reservation at this post by a party of scientists sent out from New York city by the American Museum of Natural History. The expedition is under the leadership of Prof. C. R. Wieland. The first and largest of the specimens was discovered six weeks ago. It is in perfect preservation and is part of an animal fully 40 feet long.

BURNED TO A CRISP.

Three Children Lose Their Lives in Their Burning Home During the Absence of the Parents.

Tionesta, Pa., Dec. 13.—A fire occurred at Golzina, about 12 miles from this place, Wednesday, which resulted in the death of three children of E. W. Grubbs. The mother had gone to call on a neighbor, leaving the children in the house, when an unexpected pressure of gas came on, overheating the stove and igniting the building. When discovered the fire had gained such headway that it was impossible to enter the building, and the little ones, aged 5 and 2 years and 6 months, were burned to a crisp.

Should Be Home By Midnight.

New York, Dec. 13.—Justice Andrews, in the supreme court Wednesday, handed down a decision in which he holds that a woman should be home by midnight. The question arose on an application by Florence Abell, a dressmaker, to enjoin Jacob A. Omdrak, her landlord, from closing the front door of the house and not immediately admitting her when she rang the bell.

Senator Davis' Will.

St. Paul, Minn., Dec. 13.—The will of the late Senator Cushman K. Davis, who died November 27, was filed for probate Wednesday by Mrs. Anna M. Davis, the widow. The will is very concise and was made during the senator's last illness. It leaves all his estate to Mrs. Davis and names the St. Paul Trust Co. as executor. The estate is valued at $25,000 in personal and $40,000 in real property.

HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

Anniversary Celebration of the Removal of the National Capital.

The District of Columbia and the Whole City Celebrated the Capital's National Day—Model For a New White House.

Washington, Dec. 13.—With imposing ceremonies the national capital Wednesday celebrated the centennial anniversary of the founding of the seat of the federal government in Washington. The exercises combined a brilliant military parade, a review by the president from the east front of the capitol and orations in the hall of the house of representatives before a brilliant audience. By act of congress the day was made a national holiday in the District of Columbia, and the whole city celebrated the capital's national day. President McKinley and the members of his cabinet took prominent parts in all the exercises, and with them were the governors of a large number of the states and territories of the union, the senators and representatives in congress, the judiciary of the United States supreme court, the ambassadors and ministers from foreign courts, the heads of the army and navy, and a great outpouring of the people.

Although Washington has seen many celebrations, there has been seldom one here of greater brilliancy in its outdoor features, or more impressiveness in its ceremonial exercises, at the capitol and at the white house. Early in the day the president received the governors of states and territories at the white house, and the model for a new and enlarged white house, to commemorate the day's exercises, was unveiled with suitable addresses. At 1 o'clock the president was escorted to the capitol, where he reviewed a parade headed by Lieut. Gen. Miles and including the full military strength of the capital, regulars and militia.

After the parade came imposing exercises in the hall of the house of representatives, where gathered as distinguished a company as its walls had ever held. On the floor were the president and members of his cabinet, ex-President Harrison, the members of the senate and house, the ambassadors and ministers of foreign countries in full court uniform, the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court in their judicial robes, Lieut. Gen. Miles and many distinguished officers of the army and navy who had received the thanks of congress, the governors of more than half the states of the union and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, while the galleries were resplendent with the wealth and culture of the national capital.

As a spectacle nothing could have been more inspiring and impressive. The bright sun streaming through the ground glass ceiling, on which were the arms of the several states, flooded the hall with light and heightened the effect of the gowns of the ladies in the galleries, the glistening uniforms on the floor and the elaborate scheme of decoration which submerged the hall in a sea of color. Never before in the history of the house has the staid old legislative hall, with its severe gold and white galleries and its plain marble rostrum, been decorated to anything like the extent it was Wednesday.

The address of Mr. Payne, of New York, the floor leader of the majority in the house, on "The Establishment of the Seat of Government in the District of Columbia" afforded an interesting glimpse into the present machinations of the forefathers, and received marked attention.

Senator McComas, of Maryland, followed with an address on "The History of the First Century of the National Capital." It was also well received.

The fervid eloquence of Senator Daniels, who spoke on "The Future of the United States and Its Capital," repeatedly aroused the assemblage to applause.

Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, concluded the exercises with a finished and scholarly historical oration. The concluding feature of the celebration was a reception Wednesday night at the Corcoran Art gallery from 8 to 11 o'clock, attended by the president and several members of his cabinet, governors of the various states and their staffs, who participated in the day's events, and a large contingent of official and resident society. President McKinley, accompanied by Secretaries Wilson and Hitchcock and Secretary Cortelyou, arrived about 9:30 o'clock. They were met at the door by the reception committee and were escorted to the balcony, where the president sat for 15 minutes in conversation with Charles J. Bell, the chairman of the reception committee, watching the moving throng below. Mr. McKinley was given a hearty reception by the crowd.

Heir to a Million.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 13.—Mrs. Tessie Goodrich, of Minneapolis, named in dispatches from San Francisco as one of the five heirs to the $5,000,000 estate of Edward Kerns at Montreal, is Mrs. Aaron A. Goodrich, wife of a clerk for a lumber company.

The New Tunnel.

Seattle, Wash., Dec. 13.—The first train will be run through the Great Northern tunnel in the Cascade mountains next Sunday. The tunnel is 13,200 long and the thickness of the roof at the thickest place is 5,300 feet.

ON BEHALF OF MRS. SELLS.

Wm. Bott, One of the Co-Respondents, Will Take the Stand—The Reading of Depositions.

Columbus, O., Dec. 13.—The reading of the deposition of W. E. Mongar was continued in the hearing of the Sells case Wednesday morning. In the cross-examination Mongar gives more details of what he called the "conspiracy" to suborn witness on behalf of Mrs. Sells in Chattanooga. Mongar said he was working for both sides in the case and was being paid by both plaintiff and defendant.

Mrs. Sells and her attorneys held a long consultation Wednesday morning. Wm. Bott, co-respondent, who has been excluded from the courtroom, called at the court house on Wednesday morning and also held an interview with the attorneys for Mrs. Sells. He will go on the stand for Mrs. Sells. Both Mrs. Sells and Bott will go on the stand for the defense, but it is hardly probable that either will be reached this week.

In his deposition Mongar said that he was to get $100 for the work done for plaintiff and as much more from the defense. He gave a list of witnesses who were to testify for Mrs. Sells, but said some of them had been dropped because they were in jail on the night it was claimed that Peter Sells was at the Schultz house.

The reading of Mongar's deposition was suspended while Rev. E. Willis Souder, of Clinton, Ind., took the stand. Rev. Mr. Souder was an old friend of the Sells family and is a minister of the Presbyterian church. He was at Clayton, Ill., when it is alleged that Mrs. Sells was intimate with Ned Raymond and Harry Lyons at that place. He knew nothing of this, however, although he recalled visits Harry Lyons had made to Clayton. He said that until this case came up he had never heard anything derogatory to the character of Mrs. Sells. He was excused without cross-examination.

The reading of the Mongar deposition was resumed, deponent giving more details of the Chattanooga conspiracy.

CIVIL WAR IN COLOMBIA.

Advices From That Country Tell of Desperate Fighting in Nearly Every State.

New York, Dec. 13.—Advices received Wednesday from various parts of Colombia, and confirmed by passengers who arrived from Panama, tell of desperate fighting in nearly every state. The government troops are in a poor physical condition and suffering from several forms of tropical fevers. Senator Arturo Brigard, Colombia's consul general in this city, has been ordered by his government to purchase and ship immediately a large quantity of quinine for use of the army. The most desperate fighting is now going on in the department of Bolivar. In a battle fought at Tolu Viejo on November 25, the revolutionists lost, among 100 killed and wounded, two able officers, Gen. P. Camacho and Col. Enrique Pinedo. The rebels took 200 prisoners, besides which the government force lost 100 in killed. Five cannon were also taken by the rebels.

From the department of Magdalena comes the news that Gen. Vargas Santos, president of the revolutionary movement, with his force, has arrived at the port of Rio Hacha and established the government there.

MISTAKE ALL AROUND.

Revenue Officers Mistake a Party of Men For Moonshiners—in a Fight Four Men Were Shot.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 13.—A fight between revenue officers and a party of men whom the officers mistook for illicit distillers, in Madison county, Alabama, Wednesday, resulted in the shooting of four men. Deputy Collector Jolly Ranier, of the officers' party, was fatally injured, and three men—Drenem, Lloyd and Johnson, of the other party—received serious wounds. The officers, thinking the men in the wagon were Tennessee moonshiners with a load of "moonshine" en route for Huntsville, ordered them to halt. They mistook the officers for highwaymen, and both parties opened fire.

A Tennessee Tragedy.

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 13.—A special from Coal Creek says: George Hines, a miner, fired two shots at Mrs. George W. Bentley, and while in the act of firing a third was shot dead by an unknown person. Hines was drunk, and Mrs. Bentley, his next-door neighbor, was at the well pumping water, when Hines began firing. There appears to have been no previous trouble between the families. A jury of inquiry is seeking evidence as to who killed Hines.

Rev. Henry Langford entirely cured of Nervous Prostration by Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.

REV. HENRY LANGFORD.

Rev. Henry Langford, the eminent Baptist divine, of Weston, W. Va., has just escaped utter nervous and physical prostration. He is pastor of four churches. "For ten years," he said, "I have been nervous and growing worse all these years. During the last four or five years I became so nervous I could scarcely sign my name so it could be read. I was so nervous that I could not read my own sermon notes after they had been laid aside awhile."

"I was unable to hold my head steady in the pulpit, nor could I hold or handle my books and papers without embarrassment, owing to the trembling and weakness of my hands and arms. I was so nervous that I could scarcely feed myself. In fact my nervous system was wrecked."

"I tried many remedies recommended by physicians, but found no permanent relief. One day I was in the store of R. S. Ogden, at Sardis, W. Va., and he said to me: 'You take two bottles of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and if you say it don't help you, you need not pay for it.'"

"I took two bottles of this medicine and found so much relief that I bought two more bottles, and now I am wonderfully improved in health and in strength. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy did it. I can heartily and truthfully recommend it to the sick. Too much cannot be said in praise of this splendid medicine. I say this for the good of other sufferers from nervous and prostrating diseases who can be cured by this remedy. For myself, I am thankful to God that I found Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and for what it has done for me."

THE SANTA FE STRIKE.

Why the Telegraph Operators on That System Quit Work.

A Statement Given Out By Mr. Dolph, the President of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers—Extent of the Strike.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 11.—The following statement was given on Monday night by President Dolph, of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers: "One reason why the men on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe were ready and even anxious to espouse the cause of their brethren on the Gulf line was a deception practiced on the telegraphers' committee by Vice President Barr in Chicago last June. An agreement had been effected between the railroad company and the committee, and the latter sent home with the promise that the agreement would be sent to Topeka for printing. When published the schedule had been changed to read so as to add one hour to the time of every night telegrapher on the road. "Mr. Barr said to Mr. Dolph that he had made the alteration after the committee had left Chicago, stating as an excuse that he had misunderstood the article as it was originally written.

"The Gulf committee complain of having received similar treatment at the hands of Mr. Barr, several rules bearing evidence of material change of meaning after having been gone over in conference at Chicago.

A late report from points along the line says that, notwithstanding the statements given out by the railroad officials, there now exists a badly congested state of affairs. At Wolf City there are 50 cars of merchandise for movement and not a train to pick them up. At Ladonia there are 70 cars and 1,000 bales of cotton on the platform, with as much more offered for shipment. At other points on the Dallas branch and through the Indian Territory a similar condition exists.

"Other organizations are offering aid, and a general tie-up will probably result if our differences are not speedily settled. Fruit and passenger trains on the main line are badly delayed, and in many instances are entirely lost. All employees, regardless of what department employed in, who may feel disposed to lend their aid will be guaranteed the same protection as offered our members, and will be returned to their positions without prejudice, or not a man engaged in this strike will return to work."

Louisville, Dec. 11.—Theo. Nemaier, of the telegraph department of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, claims to have secured 25 telegraph operators in Louisville Monday who will immediately take places left by strikers.

A GREAT WATERWAY.

Project of Connecting the Mississippi With Lakes Discussed.

The Canal Would Not Only Serve For Navigation, But Also Would Develop Horse Power to the Value of $20,000,000.

Washington, Dec. 12.—The merits of the project for connecting the Mississippi river and the great lakes by way of the Chicago sanitary canal were considered at a special meeting of the river and harbor committee held in the private lobby of the house of representatives Tuesday night. The main purpose of the meeting was to hear from a number of Chicago and Illinois gentlemen, members of the Illinois Valley association, who have been identified with the sanitary canal project, including Lyman E. Cooley, the eminent engineer; Col. Isaac Taylor, of Peoria; Frank Wenter, of the board of trustees of the sanitary canal, and Henry Mayo, of Ottawa, Ill. The Merchants' exchange, of St. Louis, Mo., was represented by H. R. Whitmore. Senator Cullom and Senator Mason, of Illinois, and the entire Illinois delegation in the house of representatives were also present, the senators and some of the members making addresses after the technical branches of the subject had been presented.

Col. Taylor was the first speaker. He pointed out the magnitude of the work already done and explained in detail the nature of the project and the cost up to this time. He said it was not asked that at this time congress take up the work of developing the full national advantages of the waterway, but that a survey be made by government engineers to serve as an intelligent basis for considering the entire subject.

L. C. Cooley set forth the engineering features of the project. He said the waterway not only would serve for navigation, but also would develop horse power worth $20,000,000 annually. He maintained that a waterway connecting Chicago and St. Louis would be justified even without the enormous commercial development it would bring about. He spoke also of the ultimate development of extensive navigation, chiefly by barges, between the lakes and the gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Whitmore, of St. Louis, in behalf of the Merchants' exchange of that city, gave the hearty endorsement of that body to the project. They regarded it, he said, as of great importance to the entire Mississippi river valley.

Senator Cullom spoke earnestly in favor of the survey. There was no purpose to commit congress to the expenditure of $25,000,000, he said, but only to secure an intelligent inquiry which would serve as a basis for future action by congress. Ever since he was a boy, the senator said, he had heard of this project, so that it could hardly be considered an afterthought of the drainage project.

Senator Mason spoke in a felicitous way of the national aspect of the canal. As a military measure it would have great value in time of trouble by allowing warships to be brought to the lakes for defensive purposes.

Second Session.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The house Friday passed the Grouse oleomargarine bill by a vote of 196 to 92. The substitute offered by the minority committee on agriculture, which imposed additional restrictions on the sale of oleomargarine to prevent its fraudulent sale as butter, and increased the penalties for violators, was defeated by a vote of 113 to 178.

The bill as passed makes all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter or imitation cheese, transported into any state or territory for consumption or sale, subject to the police power of such state or territory, but prevents any state or territory from forbidding the transportation or sale of such product when produced and sold free from coloration in imitation of butter. A PSYCHIC PHENOMENON.

In This Case No Heed Was Paid to the Repeated Warnings of Dreams.

"Speaking of superstitions and strange warnings that come to people," said a veteran Washington correspondent, according to the Star, "I had an experience once that I hardly know how to account for. I may say in advance that I don't believe in any of the business that cannot be demonstrated scientifically. One day, not a great while after the present elevator to the house press gallery had been put in, my mother sent for me to stop at her house on my way downtown, as she had something particular to see me about. I went, and she asked me if there wasn't a new elevator to the press gallery. I told her one had been put in three or four months before that. She said that was it, and that I must not ride in it, for she had dreamed the night before that I had been crushed to death in it. I laughed at her, of course, and went on my way. Down on F street I met an aunt who told me she had some thing odd to tell me. She said she had been the day before, with a niece of her husband, to see a fortune teller, as the niece had taken a fancy to see one of those fakers. The fortune teller, however, instead of telling the niece anything, had directed her remarks to her (my aunt) and had told her that she had a relative, a young man, whom she should warn, as he would be crushed to death in an elevator. That was rather a jar to me, as I was her only young man relative, and as I had so shortly before been warned by my mother. However, I laughed at her also, and went on my way to the capitol.

"I went about the committee rooms awhile, and at last, quite forgetful of my late warnings, went to the elevator to go up to the gallery. The elevator man, an old fellow whom I had known for some time, was in the cage when I got there, and before opening it he talked to me through the bars.

"I don't know," said he, "whether I ought to let you come in here or not."

"Why not?" I inquired, laughing. "Because," said he, as serious as could be, "I dreamed last night that I had run the elevator up too high and that as you started to get in you slipped some way under it, and when I got down to you at the bottom of the shaft you were smashed to death."

"This looked like the 'fatal three warnings,' and I confess I had a few doubts myself, but I had some nerve left, and I jollied him on his notion and got in. On my way up I told him what my mother and my aunt had told me, and the old fellow was so scared that he hardly knew what to do, but I got through all right, and up to date I have not been crushed in that elevator or any other, but, of course, that's no sign I won't be, and if I ever am, the cranks will be sure to hold me up as a frightful example. I suppose there are some people who wouldn't ride in that elevator for all kinds of money, and still they may fall downstairs any moment and break their necks."

WALTER CHAMP, Editors and Owners.
SWIFT CHAMP,

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

STATE SENATOR.

We are authorized to announce CARROLL PERWITT, of Montgomery county, as a candidate for State Senator from this the Twenty-eighth District, composed of the counties of Clark, Bourbon and Montgomery, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

KIND WORDS.

[Kentuckian-Citizen.]

IN MEMORY OF WALTER CHAMP.

My beloved cousin, Walter Champ, is dead.

I have had no severer trial than the loss of this friend and companion. My whole life was cheered by his unvarying fidelity and his companionship was always a solace and a comfort.

Even to the last hours of his life he was cheerful and thoughtful of others. The tedious and oft-times irksome duties of an active journalist he reluctantly yielded to others, and then only when his failing body no longer permitted his willing spirit to act did he consent to relinquish his desk.

His virtues were manifold, and the numbering of the loving ties which twined themselves into the springs of the heart is my sorest affliction.

B. M.

[Paris Reporter.]

WALTER CHAMP.

The brotherhood of newspaperdom lost one of its brightest members when the heart of Walter Champ ceased to beat. His ideas of journalism were high above the ordinary. He took no stock in the commonplace personalities, vulgarity or scandal on which some of the scavengers of the press delight to feed. The private and social side of his character was pure and greatly to be admired.

He contributed the productions of his mind to many of the leading popular publications. The productions were always wholesome and charming and carried sunshine to those who read them.

In his local newspaper work he published the plain unvarnished news. The writer is indebted to him for a thousand courtesies, and the dark days of the past few months has had the sympathy of his honest heart conveyed through the touch of his gentle hand that was so soon to clasp that of the Redeemer on the other shore.

For his many manly and honorable traits of character he will ever be held in loving remembrance.

See those fancy baskets at John T. Hinton's.

Monument To Wm. Garth.

Among the long list of noble philanthropists who have engraved their names on the hearts of their countrymen by noble deeds and charitable acts, none are more dearly beloved or their memory more kindly cherished than that of William Garth. Scores of the leading men of Kentucky and in the principal cities of the United States owe their success in life to the magnanimity of that noble man. The Hon. John W. Keller, who has risen through his own efforts from a poor boy to a leader among men in the great metropolis of New York, said when he was here recently that all his intellectual attainments and the high position he held was due to Wm. Garth in giving him the opportunity to become what he was. There are scores of business men in Paris who can truthfully say the same. There is no need of a monument to keep the memory of Wm. Garth fresh in their hearts. But one erected by them would be the greatest object lesson that could be given to the rising generation and those to come. We understand a movement is on foot to erect on the public square a drinking fountain, both for man and beast surmounted by a life size statue of Mr. Garth. The gentlemen having the movement in charge are determined to push it through to a successful termination. THE BOURBON NEWS will give the use of its columns cheerfully, and will receive and credit all subscriptions sent. There has been at least five hundred dollars already pledged to the fund, but the list has not yet actually been started. Who will be the first one to subscribe? THE NEWS will cheerfully publish all communications upon the subject.

Bourbon Circuit Court.

Yesterday at noon Judge Cantrill dismissed the jurors finally, and will take up the equity business. He will hold court to-day and to-morrow and return next week, to be present several days, so that the attorneys will have an opportunity to catch up with their work. The labor of the jurors at this term has not been very arduous. Many of the civil cases were settled between the parties, and quite a number of those charged with criminal offenses pleaded guilty and had their fine fixed by the court.

On yesterday, Barham Brown, a negro from Millersburg was given a life sentence under the habitual criminal act. He has been before the Circuit Court since infancy, has served numerous jail sentences and two terms in the penitentiary. This being his third conviction, the life sentence followed.

Will Howard and Charlie Jefferson were indicted for horse stealing, but Howard got peremptory instructions, and the jury gave Jefferson thirty days in jail at hard labor. Quite a number of indictments were returned by the Grand Jury, which have been already published in these columns. All of them were for misdemeanors. The report of the Grand Jury respecting our public institutions was very complimentary to those in charge of them.

In the case of George Alexander against the Northern Bank of Kentucky, before the case was called for trial yesterday morning the parties came to an agreement, the bank paying Mr. Alexander $750 and the costs.

NEVER GO TO MEET TROUBLE.

There are troubles enough come without invitation.
 "That claim an acquaintance we'd rather deny."
 That darkens our lives without notification.
 "That we cannot avoid, though we hopelessly try."
 Then why should we grieve us, and ceaselessly worry
 O'er what may not cloud us for many a day?
 Ah! life would not be such a struggle and hurry
 If resolved that we'd never meet trouble half-way.
 There'd not be such wrinkles and frowns on our faces,
 There'd not be so many sad hearts as there are,
 Did we not, in our folly, rob time of its grace
 By waiting for troubles that still are afar.
 We seem to be standing with hands out extended
 To greet them, as wishing no further delay.
 As if upon them real pleasures depended;
 But, says Common Sense: "Never meet trouble half-way!"
 When trouble does come, be prepared to receive it,
 And bravely and righteously meet its advance;
 Be strong; and not long ere behind you you'll leave it,
 And victory shall heal every wound of the lance.
 Let us hope, not despond, as our journey we travel,
 And happiness longer beside us will stay;
 There were fewer of riddles of life to unravel
 If resolved that we'd never meet trouble half-way.

CHAPTER II.—CONTINUED.

The major was deathly pale and his hands quivered as with palsy. For a moment he could only stare into the sympathetic eyes of his ward, who like a shapely pillar of consolation stood before him.

"Blanche, do you think—think she has gone?" he asked.

"I can't say, dear, dear guardian. I hope not. Don't give up."

He seemed to have a sudden inspiration.

"Come into my study," he said.

She followed and stood in the dark as he fumbled with the electric light fixture. In a moment the little room was illuminated. He pointed to a big iron safe in the corner, and said, huskily:

"She could not go without means. She saw me put $5,000 away yesterday. She has always known the combination."

"Oh, she wouldn't dare to take your money!" exclaimed Blanche.

"She knew I had a deposit in the bank," he said; "besides, what is mine is hers. She knows that."

With trembling fingers he turned the heavy door was opened. He drew out a strong box from one of the compartments in the safe and raised the lid.

"The money was gone."

"That settles it!" Goddard said with more calmness than Blanche had expected, but it was the calmness of utter despair. He closed the box almost with scrupulous exactness, then shut and locked the door of the safe. He went back into the library and stood before the fire, his limp hands clasped in front of him.

"Tell me what to do, Blanche," he said, plaintively. "I can't give her up. I simply cannot! I have been under bursting shells and whistling lead as thick as hail and not cared so much as that" (he snapped his fingers), "but I can't face life without her."

A door opened cautiously. Wilkins put in his bald head, fringed with gray locks.

"Shall I serve dinner?" he asked.

"Yes, but I shall not wait," said his master. "I am going back to the city."

Just then there was a ring at the door. Goddard drew himself up and listened, a light of sudden expectation in his eyes.

"Sign here," a boyish voice said to the footman who had opened the door.

"A telegram!" cried the major, and he went to the door and brought it back, tearing it open excitedly.

"Detained in town," he read, triumphantly. "Perhaps you ought to come to the Palace hotel to see me. Will return in the morning, Jeanne."

"Thank God!" he exclaimed, joyously; then his eyes snatched a thought from the depths of his ward's great staring orbs which made him glance towards his study, and she saw the joyous light in his face flicker as if a strong breeze of suspicion had blown upon it. "Ah," he sighed, "but she intended to go, Blanche; she intended to leave me!"

He dropped his hand heavily on the old-fashioned silver bell on the table.

"My overcoat, and the carriage, James," was his husky command.

Blanche linked her tapering fingers over her arm.

"But not before you have eaten your dinner, dear guardian," she pleaded.

"When you get to the city she will have dined and you may be the worse for it."

He waited till James had left the room; then he said:

"I could not eat a bite right now if my life depended on it."

When she had seen him put on his coat and leave the room she ran to the window and watched the carriage drive away at the highest speed of the blooded horses. Then she went into the dining-room, bowing to Mr. Talley, who stood waiting for her. They took their places at the long table, he on one side, she on the other. He was a handsome man of perhaps 27, who wore no beard and had the strong features of a successful actor; his hair was thick, moderately long and of a blackness which went well with his dark eyes.

"Is the major coming in now?" he asked her, deferentially.

"No, he has had to go back to the city, Mr. Talley; it was a telegram, I think."

"Ah!" the young man seemed unable to control his surprise, and then it became evident that he found much in her tell-tale face to confirm his sudden suspicion that all was not going well with his employer.

"I only wished to ask his advice about some correspondence he directed me to write," and the secretary's words contained a polite suggestion of apology for his inquiry.

The soup was brought on by Sarah. "I beg your pardon, miss, but you have forgotten to take your medicine," she said.

"It doesn't matter," answered Blanche. "Never mind about it."

"But Dr. Fleming told me to be sure to see that you took it before each meal, miss."

"Well, bring it to me, Sarah; you are a good doctor yourself."

Blanche followed the girl into the pantry, and when she had taken the medicine she said: "Mrs. Goddard was detained in town to-night, Maj. Goddard has gone to meet her; she will return to-morrow. If the servants inquire you may explain. If then she went back to the table and she and Talley ate their dinner silently. It was as if he knew something had happened to which he had no right to allude.

CHAPTER III.

It was nine o'clock when Goddard reached the city. Immediately on leaving his train he engaged a hansom and was driven over to Fifth avenue and up that thoroughfare to the Palace hotel.

By temperament he was given to introspection and an almost morbid habit of analyzing his feelings, especially when his feelings were hurt. To-night his emotions had crowded him into an attitude of deep self-pity. He told himself that no man had ever suffered as keenly as he was suffering.

The cab took him past the building of which the second floor had been occupied by Jeanne's fashionable establishment when he had met her, fallen under her inexplicable charm and married her hurriedly. It was now with a feeling bordering on suspicion that he saw the brown stone walls of the unlighted structure flit by. He remembered how she had made him faithfully promise that he was never to ask her about her past connections. She had wept copiously at this juncture and he had somehow gathered that her relatives had belonged to such humble walks in life that she dreaded the loss of his love if he were to come in contact with them. He had laughed at such an idea, but in the years of Jeanne's rigid silence on the subject this very mystery had heightened her charm in his eyes.

He alighted from the hansom under the arched portico in the flare of lights about the entrance of the Palace hotel.

"YOUR WIFE SAID IT WOULD BE BETTER FOR YOU TO SEND UP YOUR CARD."

ace hotel and went into the commodious office, which was at the juncture of two long corridors filled with well-dressed men and women seated in big chairs or strolling about. Strains of music from a Hungarian orchestra filled the air and there was aloft an odor which emanated from a Turkish smoking-room, where dim, sensuous lights burned under massive shades of crimson silk. As he threaded his way to the counter behind which stood the clerks of the house he had a queer feeling in his knees as if he had been sitting too long in a cramped position in the train. How strange for him to ask to be conducted to the room of his own wife! At that moment she seemed quite separated from him.

"My wife is here, I believe," he said to one of the clerks.

"What is the name, please?" asked the man.

"Mrs. Goddard," replied the major.

The clerk consulted a big book of entries with penciled remarks opposite the names.

"You were to come right up, Maj. Goddard," he said. "But your wife said that perhaps it would be better for you to send up your card."

Goddard fumbled in his pockets; he had forgotten his cardcase.

"I have no card," he said, "but I will write one."

The clerk gave him a blank card and a pen.

The major's hands were cold and numb, and the pen slipped from his fingers and fell. The clerk gave it to him again.

"I shall go up without that formality," the major said, drawing himself up as if on parade. "What is the number of her apartment?"

"Fifty-six, at the top of the first flight—second door to the left."

The major decided to walk rather than to take the elevator, and he hastened to the stairway indicated by the clerk. He found that his wife had secured one of the best suites of rooms the hotel afforded. She met him at the door and received him in a most splendidly appointed private parlor. It was cozy, too; a lamp with porcelain green-lined shade stood on a center table surrounded by books, late papers and magazines not far from a cheerful grate fire.

"Come in, Rowland, and don't scold me," she said, throwing her shapely arms round his neck. "I know you must have been frightened when you missed me."

He found himself all of a tremble, and his voice refused to come to him readily. He could only press her to him convulsively as he moved towards the sofa and drew her down by his side. Despite her warmth of greeting he was unable to conquer the fears which had laid such a firm hold on him during his lonely ride.

"Why did you do this, Jeanne?" he managed to say, presently.

"Don't scold me," she repeated, but there was a certain reserve in her tone which made him feel that her words had only a perfunctory significance. Something seemed to whisper that he was on the eve of battle, but the war spirit was dead within him; he had the feeling of being conquered.

"Why did you have me meet you here?" he demanded.

"To prove your love for me, Rowland," she replied, and the smile which accompanied her words was the coldest he had ever seen on her face, and yet it but for its remote kinship to former smiles of hers he adored it.

"You never doubted my love, Jeanne; that is a certainty."

"Then I have had you come that we may agree on a plan of action," she said. She nestled nearer to him and took one of his cold hands and pressed it.

"I missed the money, too, Jeanne?"

"Oh, did you? Well, I may as well confess that this meeting is an afterthought, and I do think, if you care for me, that you ought to appreciate that."

"You intended, then, to desert me?"

"Yes, that was the intention forced on me."

"Forced on you?"

"Yes, I cannot go on at Lyndhurst as it is. You knew when I became your wife that I could not remain stationary—not progress. When I married you it was clearly understood that I was to be able to gratify certain desires that I frankly confessed had always had a firm hold on me. Well, your recent speculations have reduced us to Lyndhurst and a trivial income."

"But it will be secure," he rejoined, desperately.

"Oh, I don't doubt its security, Rowland, dear, but it is hardly more than these two hands and my brain used to earn. Oh, you can see what I mean! I am simply an ambitious woman. I want things, I want power, and I am going to get my desires through you, dear husband, or we must part company. I love you as much as any woman could love a man, but my ambition is at least half of me, and it will drag me away from you if you don't come to my assistance."

"Jeanne, you know I would do anything in my power to gratify you. I know I have violated part of our matrimonial contract, but I could not help things taking such an unexpected turn."

She stroked his hand caressingly and raised it to her warm, red lips.

"Listen to me," she began, laying her head on his broad shoulder. "I want to tell you something you do not know, then I shall propose a plan. You remember that Dr. Fleming, the famous English expert on heart troubles, came to see Blanche a month ago—the day before he returned to London."

"Yes, I remember that," said the major, wondering.

"Well, perhaps it was because he thought I looked as if I could keep a secret—and some one ought to know the truth—that he made an important disclosure to me. He was deeply concerned after he had examined Blanche and sent for me to meet him in the library. He then told me, and his face was actually pale, for he seemed to like her, that she had the most fatal case of 'aortic aneurism' he called it—an acute disease of the heart—that he had ever met with in all his experience."

"My God, you can't be serious!" exclaimed the major. "She looks so well—and yet, I remember, she is taking her medicines."

"Dr. Fleming explained that to all outward appearances she would be, even to the end, as healthy looking as a perfectly sound person. He says she cannot possibly live longer than two years, and that it is most likely that she will drop off sooner—at any moment. The least excitement or unusual exertion may kill her instantly."

"Does Blanche know of her condition?" asked the major, almost forgetting his own troubles in his vast sympathy for his ward.

"No; oh, no! Dr. Fleming said that the knowledge of it would only prey on her mind and hasten the end. He was afraid to tell you; he said men were apt to show so much concern over matters of that kind that patients would suspect the truth. I promised him faithfully not to hint it to a soul, so you must never mention it or let her suspect you are anxious about her."

"Can nothing be done?"

"Absolutely nothing; the medicine she is taking is just what she needs, and he even advised me not to have her consult any other doctor. I presume, considering the fact that he is such a great authority, his wishes, even on that score, ought to be respected."

"I presume so," responded the major; "but isn't it awful?" Then he came back to his own affairs almost with a start. He frowned and sat silently looking at the fire. It was as if he were wondering what connection this disclosure could have with his wife's strange flight. He gently expressed this idea to her presently.

"After I left you to-day I got to thinking about it," was her answer, and her fingers tightened on his. "Blanche has, as you know, about three millions in her own name."

"I know that," answered the major. "When she drops off suddenly all that money will go legally to people she never saw, an aunt and cousins for whom she doesn't care a pin."

"That is the truth, Jeanne, but—"

"Please do not interrupt me, dear," pursued his wife, and she began stroking his hand again. "You told me that since you had taken charge of her affairs Blanche's money has more than doubled."

"Yes, I happened to invest it better than I did my own capital."

There was silence in the room for a moment. The muffled strains of the orchestra below stole up to their ears. The handsome woman had never thrown so much power of enchantment into her beautiful, long-lashed eyes as at this moment. She held his gaze as a reptile might that of its wondering, bewildered victim.

TAMING A COLONIAL SHREW.

Nancy Lost Her Temper and Eben Found a Way to Restore It to Her.

In colonial days it was customary for betrothed young women to ride to the nearest town, mounted on a pillion behind father or lover, for the purpose of purchasing their wedding outfit. One such prospective bride, the fair, but quick-tempered Nancy, went up to Boston with Eben, whom she was soon to marry, and the pair achieved an exhausting, but satisfactory, day's shopping, relates Youth's Companion. When, in the cool of the early evening, they started on their 20-mile journey home, they carried, stowed snugly about pocket and saddle, some dozen of their precious purchases.

About half-way, Nancy missed a package, and wished to turn back and look for it—she was sure it had been dropped. But Eben reminded her that at the moment of leaving, two parcels had been hastily combined into one, and assured her that nothing was lost; she had merely miscounted. But she was not convinced.

"There should be 13!" she declared; "a baker's dozen."

"Twelve only—a dozen, but not a baker's dozen," Eben maintained stoutly.

Then Nancy lost her temper. She vowed she was right, and that she meant to recover the missing parcel. Would he ride back at once? Amiable, but decidedly, he would not; it was getting too late to waste time. Very well, then, would he stop and allow her to dismount? He could do as he pleased; but she was going back to look for her parcel, if she went alone and on foot! But he declined to stop. Then Nancy tempestuously flung down one of her bundles on the highway, and sarcastically telling him that this time something was missing beyond question, imperatively demanded that he should stop the horse.

But Eben, big, lazy, and good-tempered, was not without spirit when aroused, and he replied that if she chose to throw things away in a tantrum, he could not stop her, but neither could he stop for her. In a fury, she tossed away a second parcel, and continued to do so—one at each milestone—until the journey ended. When at length he set her down on her own doorstep, she was sobbing and storming in her wrath, while he was still to outward appearance placid and serene.

On that same doorstep the next morning she found her 12 parcels lying in a row, each neatly numbered! He had hidden back alone and collected them, and their contents proved that he had been right, for nothing was missing.

As a very old lady, Nancy used to tell this tale against herself to her great-grandchildren, always concluding with: "And saved me right. If anybody but your granther had married me, I've doubts he might have married a shrew."

To Eben, however, local tradition attested that the hot-tempered lady had proved an affectionate and excellent wife.

Penn's Remedy.

William Penn's keen understanding was often directed toward drunkenness. "All excess is ill," he wrote, "but drunkenness is of the worst sort. In fine, he that is drunk is not a man, because he is so long void of reason, that distinguishes a man from a beast."

But if Penn was the living spirit of aphorism, he also knew when and how to apply his maxims. Given a drunkard, he could treat his case in a characteristic yet plain and reasonable way. He was once advising a man to leave off his habit of drinking intoxicating liquors. "Can you tell me how to do it?" said the slave of the appetite. "Yes," answered Penn. "It is just as easy as to open thy hand, friend."

"Convince me of that, and I will promise upon my honor to do as you tell me."

"Well, my friend," said the great Quaker, "when thou findest any vessel of intoxicating liquor in thy hand, open the hand that grasps it before it reaches thy mouth, and thou wilt never be drunk again."

The toper was so pleased with the plain advice that he followed it.—Short Stories.

THE SHUT DOOR.

Lord, I have shut my door—
Shut out life's busy cares and fretting noise.
Here in this silence they intrude no more.
Speak Thou, and heavenly joys shall fill my heart with music sweet and calm—
A holy psalm.

Yes, I have shut my door
Even on all the beauty of Thine earth—
To its blue ceiling from its emerald floor,
Filled with spring's bloom and mirth;
From these Thy words I turn, Thyself
I seek,
To Thee I speak.

And I have shut my door
On earthly passion—all its yearning love,
Its tender friendships, all the priceless store
Of human ties. Above
All these my heart aspires, O Heart divine!
Stoop Thou to mine.

Lord, I have shut my door!
Come Thou and visit me: I am alone!
Come, as when doors were shut Thou cam'st of yore
And visitest Thine own,
My Lord! I kneel with reverent love and fear.
For Thou art here.

MOTHER TUBBS

By J. L. Harbour.

(Copyright, 1900, the Authors' Syndicate.)

MOTHER TUBBS and I were the only passengers in the heavy, old stage coach as it slowly crept up the steep and rocky ascent of Golden pass. It was a raw cold November day or we would have ridden outside with Shorty, the driver, but as there was a fine, chilling mist in the air, we were glad to wrap ourselves up well on the back seat of the inside of the coach. Mother Tubbs was already in the coach when I entered it at Silver Gap camp. She greeted me quite as if I were an old friend, although I had never seen her until that moment. She was a large, motherly, comfortable looking woman of about 65 years, and she was loquacious to the last degree.

"My man he says that my tongue is loose at both ends," she said, merrily, soon after I had seated myself by her side in the coach. I had thought that she might prefer to have the back seat to herself, and I was about to take the front seat when she said:

"You'd better set here by me, for it's more comfortable riding forwards than backwards, and then there ain't but just this one robe in the stage, and we can both use it if you set here. Much as I've trailed 'round in stage coaches in the last 25 years, it makes me dead sick to ride backwards."

"Have you lived here in the Rockies 25 years?"

"Indeed, I have, my son. And I ain't ever been out o' sight of 'em in all that time, either. Oh, I'm an old-timer, I am. My land! the booms I've lived through, and the camps I've seen go up and down in that time! I went all through the Leadville boom, and the Gunnison county booms, and here I am on my way to another one over here in Poverty gulch, where I reckon you are bound for. Some o' the boys they say a boom wouldn't be, with anything if Mother Tubbs wa'n't in it. That's what they call me—Mother Tubbs. And land knows I have mothered enough of 'em to have earned the title."

We had ridden about ten miles, and Mother Tubbs' tongue had run incessantly in a very entertaining way. Presently we rode down into a narrow gulch, where five or six log cabins with sunken roofs and fallen doors indicated the existence of a little mining camp in days long past. Mother Tubbs glanced out of the window in the door of the coach, and said, with a little sigh:

"Dear me! Here's all there is left of old Camp Fancy, and when them cabins was built it was thought it would be the biggest minin' camp in the country. That's what the miners think about every new minin' camp. There was as many as a thousand miners in this gulch one summer, and there were tents and cabins all up and down the gulch. Then the min'ral veins all petered out. You see that cabin up by that big boulder?"

"Yes, I see it."

"Well, I kep' a lodgin' house there 20 years ago, and sometimes I kep' 30 people over night in the three little rooms that cabin had. I never think of them days without callin' to mind something that happened one night along the first o' the boom, when there wa'n't a great many folks in the gulch yet. I'll tell you about it if you say so."

"O please do."

"Well, it was one real cold and stormy day in November when the stage came along and dropped a single passenger at my house, and I'd never had such a passenger dropped there before. She was a yaller-haired, blue-eyed, innocent lookin' young thing of about 19, whose pa and ma had no bizness to let her be trav'lin' round alone, even if she was on her way to marry the fellow she was engaged to. But it was like this: Th' girl was inclined to be weak-lunged, and the doctors in her home back east had said that the thing for her to do was to git out to the mountains as soon as she could. Well, it so happened that she was engaged to be married to a young fellow who had come from her home out here to seek his fortune. He had got the minin' fever, and had come to this gulch, thinkin' there was to be a big boom here. He had a little money, so when the girl writ him what the doctors had said about her, he sent word for her to come right out here, and they would be married. He was full o' hope about the future, and he knew they'd git along all right. Well, she'd got here a day or two ahead o' time, so he wa'n't here to meet her. He was back on the hills prospectin', so I just mothered her, and told her to make herself right at home there at my house, and they could be married there if they had a mind to when her beau showed up. She was such an innocent lamb that I took right to her, and she was head over heels in love with this fellow. She showed me his photograft before she had been three hours in the house, and I recognized it as the face of a young chap who had stayed a day or two at my house a few weeks before. His name was Harvey Briggs.

"Well, the girl was all played out after bein' on the stage all day, and I hustled her off to bed right after supper. The night had set in awful stormy and bad, and I was settin' by a roarin' fire hemmin' some tablecloths 'long about ten o'clock and thinking that I hoped no one was out in that storm when all of a sudden my door opened and in dashed a tall, slim young feller without any hat or overcoat and lookin' skeered out of a year's growth.

"O Mother Tubbs!" he says, with his voice all of a tremble and his eyes stickin' out of his head with fright. "They are after me! What shall I do?"

"Who's after you, son?" says I. "And what are they after you for?"

"The men up in the gulch," he says. "They say I have jumped a claim, but if I have I didn't know it! I thought it was an old claim that some one had abandoned. But they can't be made to think so unless you can make 'em think it. What shall I do?"

"Well, I recognized him in a minnit as Harvey Briggs and I held up my hand for silence, fearing the girl in the other room would hear him, but she was too worn out and slept too soundly to be easily wakened. I told the boy—he wa'n't over 22—to set down, and he kep' beggin' me to hide him, and I was about to send him to the loft overhead when the door swung open and in come about as many men as could crowd into the room, and the young feller give a yell and run into a corner like a skeered rabbit. Well, I just jumped right in front of him, and I held up my hand and I says, says I:

"Stand back, boys; stand back!

There ain't one of you that wants to lay hands on a woman, and you'll have it to do if you try to pull him out. Stand back, I tell you!"

"I knew more than half o' 'em, and I tell you, they stood back. It'd been mighty rash for one o' 'em to lay hands on Mother Tubbs, for there were boys there that would have fit to the death for me, and one of them boys was Bill Hodge, the leader o' the gang. He says, says he:

"Yes, stand back and hear what Mother Tubbs has to say."

"I got this to say, says I: 'There's a young gal in the other room who has come nearly 2,000 miles to marry this boy, and just as sure as you take his life hers will go, too, for she is just that far gone on him. You don't want her blood on your hands; no, nor you don't want any human blood on your hands. This boy says he didn't mean to jump that claim, and even if he did he is a young, inexperienced boy, and it ain't for you to judge him. I don't believe that he meant to do wrong, and I tell you right flat that you don't take him out o' this house to his death. I'll shoot first!"

"There was a loaded rifle on the wall back o' me, and I grabbed it and held it out before me."

"Bully for Mother Tubbs!" says Bill Hodge.

"Just at that minnit the door of the cabin's other room opened and the girl come out. She had on a long, loose, blue wrapper and all her yeller hair hangin' down her back. The young feller screams out 'Lucy!' and she was in his arms in a minnit. Then, in a minnit or two, she says:

"What are all these men here for?"

"La, child," says I, "they have come to your wedding. We'll have the ceremony performed right now. Come, parson, marry 'em right off."

"You see, I had a parson that had just come to the camp lodgin' with me, and he had been routed out by the noise and had just come into the room. He come forward and the girl kind o' objected to bein' married in a blue wrapper, but I told her that she couldn't look purtier in the finest white satin and that it would be a pity to send the men away without seein' a weddin' when they had come fer that purpose. So she give in, and they was married, and if Bill Hodge wa'n't the first one to shake hands with the bridegroom, and he kissed the bride! I flew around and made coffee and cut a big fruit cake I'd made for Thanksgiving, and we had a gay time. And the young fellow turned out real well. He is a prosperous man and he and his wife have four lovely children. I visited 'em last week. But I reckon that was the first and only time a lynchin' was ever turned into a weddin'."

Vigorous Measures.

For a long time the favorite form of "make believe" of little Faith was that of "getting married." For weeks she was a bride, marching down an imaginary aisle to the strains of an imaginary wedding march, to meet an imaginary bridegroom. At last her mother, becoming tired of it, said:

"Faith, don't you know that when you get married you will have to leave me?"

This was a rude awakening, and the game stopped. Not long afterward she came to ask the difference between "Miss" and "Mrs." To make herself clear her mother said:

"Well, when you grow up and become a young lady you will be Miss Butler; but if some man should ask you to marry him—"

"I'd call a policeman!" exclaimed Faith, and her interest was at an end.—Harper's Magazine.

HE WAS READY FOR MORE.

Not Even a Railway Collision Could Subdue the Aard of a Football Man.

The two trains came together with a terrific crash. Some one had blundered. That, however, was a matter which would have to be left for future investigation.

As soon as those who were uninjured could extricate themselves from the wreck they turned manfully to the work of rescuing their less fortunate fellow-passengers, says the Chicago Times-Herald.

It was a sickening sight. Cars were heaped on top of one another. People were pinned under seats, beams and trucks. Steam was hissing from the overturned boilers, the rails of the track were warped and torn loose from the ties, and the moans and cries of the injured could be heard afar off.

Finally, after long, hard work, the rescuers reached the bottom of the mass, where the legs and body of a man protruded from beneath a twisted platform. Beside him lay a cane decorated with colored ribbons, and a long tin horn.

Fearfully and anxiously a score of strong men lifted the weight from the head and shoulders of the prostrate one and carried him up the embankment. As they reached the higher level he opened his eyes, passed a hand in front of them, as if brushing away a dim screen of some kind, and shouted: "Rah! rah! rah! Sizz! boom, ah! Ki-yi! hip! hip! hooray! Come on, fellows! Which side has the ball?"

Dog Fights in Kentucky Do Not Terminate with the Whipping of a Dog.

"The colonel and I sat talking under a shade tree in front of the town post office when a dog fight started down the street," said a traveling man, relating an incident of a recent trip to Kentucky, relates the Washington Post.

"Come on!" I said, as I sprang up. "Come this way!" replied the colonel, as he seized my arm and drew me into a doorway.

"But I want to see the dog fight," I protested.

"Yes, I reckon you do, but you also want to keep clear of the shooting."

"Why should there be any shooting?" "Because one dog has got to lick the other, and the owner of the licked dog ain't goin' to let it rest that way. They're goin' to fight it out." "Ten minutes later we stepped out to find one man lying on the ground with two bullets in him and some people carrying away a second with half a dozen.

"Dog fights are a fearful affair," said the colonel, as we walked away together, "but the safest way to see one in Kentucky is to wait till it's all over and the dead carried off."

WHY MRS. PINKHAM

Is Able to Help Sick Women When Doctors Fail.

How gladly would men fly to woman's aid did they but understand a woman's feelings, trials, sensibilities, and peculiar organic disturbances.

Those things are known only to women, and the aid a man would give is not at his command.

To treat a case properly it is necessary to know all about it, and full information, many times, cannot be given by a woman to her family physician.

MRS. G. H. CHAPPELL.

sician. She cannot bring herself to tell everything, and the physician is at a constant disadvantage. This is why, for the past twenty-five years, thousands of women have been confiding their troubles to Mrs. Pinkham, and whose advice has brought happiness and health to countless women in the United States.

Mrs. Chappell, of Grant Park, Ill., whose portrait we publish, advises all suffering women to seek Mrs. Pinkham's advice and use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as they cured her of inflammation of the ovaries and womb; she, therefore, speaks from knowledge, and her experience ought to give others confidence. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass., and her advice is absolutely free.

MRS. BREWER RECOMMENDS PERUNA FOR GRIP AND FEMALE CATARRH

The Home of Mrs. Lizzie M. Brewer at Westerly, R. I.

In a letter to Dr. Hartman concerning the merits of Peruna, Mrs. Brewer writes, among other things:

"Dear Dr. Hartman—I find Peruna a sure cure for all catarrhal affections so common in this part of the country. It cures a cold at once. There is no cough medicine that can at all equal Peruna. As for a gripper, there is no other remedy that can at all compare with Peruna."

"I am among the sick a great deal in our city and have supplied many invalids with Peruna, simply because I am enthusiastic in my faith as to its results. I have never known it to fail to quickly and permanently remove that demoralized state of the human system which follows a gripper."

"In all cases of extreme weakness I use Peruna with perfect confidence of a good result. In cases of weakness peculiar to my sex I am sure that no other remedy can approach in good results the action of Peruna."

It meets all the bad symptoms to which females are subject. The irregularities and nervousness, the debility and miseries which afflict more or less the women from childhood to change of life, are one and all met and overcome by this excellent remedy. I wish every young lady in our city could read your book.

"Mrs. Lizzie M. Brewer."

Peruna will cure the worst cases of catarrh. La grippe is acute epidemic catarrh, for which Peruna is a specific.

Mrs. J. W. Reynolds, New Lisbon, Ohio, suffered for many years with chronic catarrh of the lungs, head and throat; continuous cough; many physicians failed to cure. Permanently cured by Peruna. Thousands of testimonials could be produced. A valuable treatise on catarrh sent free by The Peruna

Many have lost confidence and hope as well as health, because they thought their kidney disease was incurable. Foley's Kidney Cure is positive cure for the discouraged and disconsolate. Take no other. Clarke & Kenney

Help is needed at once when a person's life is in danger. A neglected cough or cold may soon become serious and should be stopped at once. One Minute cough cure quickly cures coughs, colds and the worst cases of croup, bronchitis, grippe and other throat and lung troubles. W. T. Brooks.

For Pneumonia

Dr. C. J. Bishop, Agnew, Mich., says: "I have used Foley's Honey and Tar in three very severe cases of pneumonia with good results in every case." There is nothing so good. Clarke & Kenney.
